OHIO LAW STUDENTS DISCUSS ABOLISHING BAR EXAM

DAYTON, Ohio, March 1, 1976 --- One of the first actions to be considered by the newly formed Ohio Federation of Student Bar Associations will be the possibility of abolishing the bar exam.

A committee, one of four formed during the recent organization meeting of the Ohio Federation at the University of Dayton, will explore changes for admission requirements to the bar. The committee will consider possible moves in the light of the fact that four states have abolished the bar exam.

Students also will have to consider words of the President of the Ohio State Bar Association Daniel Rosenthal who addressed the students during their meeting and said the bar exam should be abolished. He contended that law schools are the best judge of a student's qualifications.

Sitting on the committee are students from Case Western Reserve, Cleveland State and Akron Law Schools. The committee's report is due at the Federation's next meeting at Case Western Reserve Law School at a date to be set in March.

Other study committees appointed include one on placement composed of students from the University of Cincinnati and Salmon P. Chase Law School, and a committee on rating procedures and one on federation structure composed of students from the University of Toledo. The committee on rating procedures will consider the possibility of a grading curve which is uniform throughout Ohio law schools.
